

Contact process and related competition models

Nevena Marić

University of Missouri - St. Louis

This talk is about the contact process, a fundamental interacting particle system that models infection spread by contact. We show that an infection could possibly survive forever using only individuals, and contacts among them, inside a time-space wedge. We further use this result to show that coexistence of species is possible in an interesting 2-type competition model.